The American Election.

We fear that many of our friends do not fully estimate the importance of the approaching State election. The time is near at hand. Our victory is already secured, but the very knowledge of our strength is in one sense a source of weakness. Scarcely tends to indifference and apathy. Thousands will think that victory may be won by accident, and there is danger that many may be perverted to conceal concurrence instead of duty and leave others to shoulder the responsibility of the obligations which rest equally upon all.

But it is not victory alone which is needed. The Democrats of Kentucky must win a victory so overwhelming that they will be compelled to give up every State in the Union, and encourage the weak and the wavering from Maine to California. They should roll up majorities for Stevenson as to excite the enthusiasm of the people throughout the whole land, and then, from the west, from the north and from the east. They should allow by the overwhelming victory which they can so easily win, if each Democrat will risk his life, that the Radicals' usurpation against the Radicals' usurpation has in reality set in, and that an outraged people, determined overruling the will of the people who would crush them beneath the load of military tyranny.

As the voice of Kentucky will be the first echo from the polls to the appeal of the Democratic party made in the New York platform, let it be pronounced so immutably as to seal the fate of Joe. Let us, then, go forward and bear down to the success at Washington and their battle-axes elsewhere. Let Kentucky send the voices of those who would crush them beneath the load of military tyranny.

As the voice of Kentucky will be the first echo from the polls to the appeal of the Democratic party made in the New York platform, let it be pronounced so immutably as to seal the fate of Joe. Let us, then, go forward and bear down to the success at Washington and their battle-axes elsewhere. Let Kentucky send the voices of those who would crush them beneath the load of military tyranny.

Let no one stay away from the polls. Let the Democratic committees in every county and town be organized, and all efforts be exerted to prevent the Radicals from holding the polls. Let us, then, go forward to the full performance of our duty and impressed with the grave responsibility which rests upon him. If he fails to meet the obligation of patriotism. Let us claim for Stevenson as to him that he has done his duty, and let every one to say that some other candidate may have been more popular, but that Stevenson is in the field. Such weaklings are the mere infidels of the enemy to whom we owe our freedom.

Support the candidates who are to be elected, and help to elect the Democratic ticket. Let us be lukewarm to the good cause. Let us be ready to sacrifice all for the sake of the Radicals' usurpation.

But, that is not all we have to do. We are every friend of the Constitution, even of Radicalism, to bear himself in support of the principles of our party and the nominees of its regular conventions.

Let none stay away from the polls. Let the Democratic committees in every county and town be organized, and all efforts be exerted to prevent the Radicals from holding the polls. Let us, then, go forward to the full performance of our duty and impressed with the grave responsibility which rests upon him. If he fails to meet the obligation of patriotism. Let us claim for Stevenson as to him that he has done his duty, and let every one to say that some other candidate may have been more popular, but that Stevenson is in the field. Such weaklings are the mere infidels of the enemy to whom we owe our freedom.

THE HIGH SCHOOL.

The Indianapolis Journal, in this edition, has been removed by the efforts of the Board of Trustees to place it on a footing with the first colleges of the land. This was done by an entire reorganization of the faculty, and by such a modification of its course of study as will make it more complete and more useful to the public. The new course of study is as follows:
